They are the most powerful cars Plymouth ever built. The 1955 engines are a 117-horsepower Power-Flow six, a 157-horsepower Hy-Pire V-8 and a 167-horsepower Hy-Pire V-8. The latter engine is also available with a four-barrel carburetor and special manifold which increases its horsepower to 177.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE

The Protestant Churches of Virginia will observe Sunday, November 14, as "Cooperative Christianity Day." On this day attention will be called to the fact that the Protestant Churches have many things in common and do work together and emphasis will be placed on the fact that there is strength in Christian unity.

Fifteen denominations in Virginia comprised of about 4,000 churches and with a membership totaling approximately 1,000,000 joined together on July 6, 1944 and organized the Virginia Council of Churches as an agency through which the Protestant Churches of the state could work together in cooperative Christianity.

Accidents Don't Just Happen

(Washington Evening Star)

Virginia's State Police, after a look at the dictionary, have decided that very few of the traffic crashes on public highways are really "accidents." State Police Superintendent C. W. Woodson has ordered his men to avoid use of such a designation unless the facts warrant. He has found that the facts seldom do.

In his annual report on "traffic crashes" in the state during 1953 Mr. Woodson pointed out that Webster defines an accident as "an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation." He commented: "We believe that persons who drive unsafely or illegally, operate defective vehicles or drive when adversely affected physically cannot honestly say the collision was unexpected." There is more than a lesson in semantics in Mr. Woodson's observation, as any thoughtful driver can testify.

England's Queen Mother is on a visit to Virginia while in America.

CITE NEEDS OF VA. TUBERCULOSIS PATIENTS

The unhospitalized tuberculosis patients in Virginia and their needs for hospital and other services is the subject of a special statewide Fact Finding Study to be conducted by the Virginia Tuberculosis Association and the State Department of Health, Thomas Pinckney, president of the Virginia Tuberculosis Association, announced today.

Plans for the project involve the participation of local health departments of the state and local tuberculosis associations. The project, Pinckney explained, is an extension and refinement of certain portions of "A Study of Tuberculosis in Virginia—1952."

However, by centering attention on the TB patients at home now and their present day needs, he added, we will be able to furnish a realistic picture of the current tuberculosis situation in Virginia.

The study will gather essential data about the age, race, sex and geographical distribution of Virginia's tuberculosis patients who are not in hospitals. It will also furnish detailed information on the present status of their disease, their present and past treatment, their social and economic status and their vocational rehabilitation needs.

It was pointed out out by Pinckney that participation by VTA and its affiliated associations throughout the state is made possible by the annual sale of Christmas Seals which opens this year on November 22.

BARN CLEANERS CUT CHORES TIME

Barn cleaners cut chore time for the dairymen, say agricultural engineers at VPI.

Welding a wheelbarrow and a shovel, a man will take 70 seconds per cow to clean the barn. With a litter carrier, cleaning time can be reduced to 56 seconds per cow. Another second can be shaved from the cleaning time with two men loading a manure spreader backed down the barn alley.

A semi-automatic barn cleaner takes only 28 seconds per cow per day to clean the barn. It consists of a scoop, pulled by an electrically powered winch. The scoop pushes the manure along the gutter and elevates it into the spreader. The operator pulls the scoop back to get more manure. This type is recommended for herds under 20 cows because the cost is low.

For larger herds, an automatic barn cleaner can remove manure in only 13 seconds per cow per day. Other than pushing a button that turns on the machine, the only work that has to be done is scraping down the alley and stall.

Most barn cleaners are sold installed, so the installation job is done by a company representative.

If you already have gutters in your barn, it may be possible to get a cleaner that fits your present set up.

If you are building or remodeling a barn, make gutters at least 10 inches deep and 16 to 18 inches wide. This will provide capacity for once-a-day cleaning. Extend gutters in a straight line from one end of the barn to the other. Leave holes through the wall where manure is to be discharged.

HEALTH OFFICER ISSUES WARNING ON RABBIT FEVER

As the hunting season arrives, Dr. H. E. Jenkins, Health Director, issues a timely warning in regard to tularemia, or rabbit fever.

Tularemia is a specific infectious disease found in rodents, many wild animals and some birds. Dr. Jenkins said, The disease is transmitted from animal to animal by biting insects. Wild rabbits seem to be a principal source of infection, as a large proportion of cases are reported during the hunting season be warned. The organism causing the disease may enter the body by ingestion, inoculation, or contamination. Ninety per cent of the cases are traceable to contact with infectious wild rabbits. The disease is not transmitted from man to man but infection in the laboratory occurs readily.

Some suggestions on the prevention of the disease are given here.

Rubber gloves afford complete protection in the handling of game. Refrigeration of wild rabbits does not destroy the organism rapidly because of its ability to live long in the tissues at low temperatures. Thorough cooking of wild game, especially rabbits, is very important. No red juices should remain around the bones when the game is ready to be served. Be suspicious of rabbits that were easily killed as they may be too weak to run. Do not rub the eyes while cleaning game and wash hands thoroughly after skinning and dressing rabbits.
